Armando provides both substantive and administrative support to case teams handling high-profile commercial disputes and white collar defense matters. He analyzes and investigates facts pertinent to the case, including docket information, mobile phone records, and social media accounts; drafts and revises materials for trials, depositions, and court filings; and assists with showcasing exhibits and presentations at trial.

As a former political campaign organizer, Armando is conscious of the vital role communication plays in obtaining successful outcomes. He takes a collaborative approach to his work, proactively sharing his findings and concerns to effectively move the case forward. Armando also leverages the rigorous analytical skills he developed as an academic researcher to consistently create high-quality work products.

Previously, Armando served as a research assistant at the American Bar Foundation, where he studied the underrepresentation of Asian-Americans and other racial minorities in federal judicial clerkships.
